A note from your Newsletter Editor

I would like to add a few words to this newsletter. I have agreed to take on the position as Editor of the Newsletter. I know it will take time to get things organized properly and I hope all of you will bear with me. I would appreciate any comments, within reason (hi, hi,), and any articles you would like to submit to be inserted in future editions of the Newsletter. Hopefully things will eventually run smoothly and you all will be able to download and read your Newsletter well in advance of the next General Meeting.

Depending on the number of checkins we generally run 30 to 45 minutes for the net. I will continue to call CQ until 8:00 p.m. even if I can't hear anyone, so if you are late, not to worry, I will be listening.

A CHEAP WAY TO BE ON THE AIR VA3OL, Bill

There are so many facets to ham radio that one doesn't know where to begin. But, perhaps the easiest way to begin is with an older HT (handy talky) or hand held radio.

These units typically put out 2 to 5 watts to the 'rubber ducky' and you can find older ones for as little as 20 dollars at a flea market. But to be fair you should expect to pay 50 to $100 for one. I bought an older Radio Shack HTX-202 for $60 at a flea market. It came in the original box and had all of the accessories and documentation. By that I mean that it had an 'expired' nicad battery pack but it also came with a 6 cell disposable battery carrier, charger, manual, rubber duck and belt clip. For a while I was satisfied with using the disposable battery carrier, but I used rechargeable batteries in it. Then I found some surplus 720 mah, 3.6 volt battery packs that I thought would work in the HT. Please see my article in a past issue of the KARC newsletter.

The beauty of this HT and many other older HT's is that they also accept 12volts in a connector in the top or side of the HT, so that you can use them in the shack or in the car with an external power supply (suitably fused of course). Don't get me wrong. HT's are a compromise due to their low power and lack of an efficient antenna. But they can do the job if you know how to treat them. I have installed a Ringo Ranger 2 meter antenna just outside of my shack on an 8-foot pole. By running some coax into the shack and using a PL-259 to BNC adapter I can use this antenna with my HT. Running 4 or 5 watts from Bayridge I can hit the Watertown repeater and all of the local repeaters. That's good enough for me!

Mobile, I use a cheap magnet mounted 2- meter antenna and a PL-259 to BNC adapter. But then I don't often take the two- meter rig in the car. When I do, I often just use the rubber ducky antenna and 'for the most part' that is good enough.

First item to look for in an old HT is what the original battery pack has in it's guts. Most of the ICOM packs have sub AA cells that are hard to find but some of them have AA cells that are easily replaced. But how can I tell what's in the battery pack? That is both hard and easy.... size does matter. You will find that the 6 cell standard AA packs measure about 2 to 2 ½ inches tall. They are bigger then the sub AA packs. By today's standards these old HT's are big and clunky but they serve us very well. Many of the newer HT's are very small, shirt pocket size, cover from 1 to a billion ghz but most won't accept anything but the specialized batteries that come with it and cost $100 to replace just the battery. Since the life expectancy of a ni-cad battery pack is 3 to 5 years.... obsolescence is built in! A 5 year old HT with no battery is either land- fill or to expensive to rebuild.

The price. He wanted $55.... No thanks.... He probably ended up getting his price or close to it.

Oh, and by the way, I did find an ICOM 6 cell alkaline battery holder at a flea market... something close to it because a lot of the old HT's have expired battery packs that cost between 50 and $100 to replace. But I wasn't prepared to pay that price.

I have always found that the best place to get information is other hams. Ask around – what are other people using and what would they suggest.
